Dear Ben:

I am sorry to have been so long in replying to your letter of June 1 which contained your proposed adjustment in the matter of our C-46 aircraft, but I have been out of town.

As I told you in my earlier letter, our delay in settling the balance of your account was not prompted by a desire on our part to hold your feet to the fire, but simply as a matter of good business we were obliged to ask you to propose an adjustment.

I would suggest that in further dealings we mutually agree to a well-defined set of specific tasks to be performed on the aircraft, and I believe also that it would be very helpful to us if your invoices were to contain a little bit more specific information than the April 25 one, especially that dealing with serial numbers of items replaced or new items installed where applicable.

We find your proposed adjustment acceptable and are therefore willing to settle out on the basis of [redacted] in final payment. A check in this amount will be forthcoming to you in a day or so. With best regards,

Sincerely yours,

SIGNED
